SENATE OK'S BIPARTISAN MEASURES TO PRESERVE OPEN SPACES AND HISTORIC PLACES

TRENTON – A package of bipartisan bills that would provide direct grants to numerous communities for the direct preservation of open space, farmland and historic properties was today passed by the Senate.

In total, the eight bills would provide more than $260 million in Green Acres, Blue Acres, Farmland Preservation, and Historic Trust funds to county and local governments and community organizations.

Senators Bob Smith (D-Middlesex) and Christopher "Kip" Bateman (R-Somerset), the chairman and ranking Republican on the Senate Environment & Energy Committee, respectively, praised the Senate's unanimous support for the bills.

"New Jerseyans have long supported Green Acres and farmland preservation, both in principle and at the ballot box, because they simply are the right thing to do to ensure that there are open spaces for our children and future generations to enjoy," said Smith. "And we cannot know where we are going unless we understand where we have come from, making historic preservation essential to the future of our state."

"Even in difficult economic times, New Jersey residents recognize the importance of preserving open space, farmland and historic and cultural sites," Bateman continued. "These important bills give us a chance to set a large amount of land aside so it can be used wisely and enjoyed for generations to come."

The state's Blue Acres program allows communities to purchase properties that have been damaged by floods or are prone to flooding, or that may buffer or protect other lands from floods.

The Farmland Preservation Program was established in 1983.

Created in 1967, the New Jersey Historic Trust has provided financial investments in planning and capital projects to stabilize, repair, restore and rehabilitate historic properties.
